How did the Fund perform during the reporting period?

- For the 12 months ended October 31, 2024, the Fund underperformed its benchmark index, largely because of differences in the prices of securities used by the Fund to calculate its net asset value and the quoted published prices for the same securities. This practice is known as fair-value pricing.
- Global economic growth appeared relatively stable at around 3% during the period, and U.S. recession fears faded. With inflation continuing to moderate across much of the world, major central banks including the European Central Bank, the Bank of England, and the U.S. Federal Reserve began lowering policy rates. Global stocks posted very strong returns.
- The Fund's benchmark posted solid results across all regions and sectors. Of the two largest regions in the benchmark by weight, emerging markets posted the strongest returns; given its heavier weighting in the index, however, Europe contributed most to the Fund's returns. By sector, financials, industrials, and technology contributed most.
